KITTY CLOVER.

The Curse of Empty Hands.

At dawn the call was heard.

And losy respers stirred.

Along the highway leading to the wheat.

"Wilt reap with us 5" they said.

I smiled and shook my head.

"Disturb me not," said I, "my dreams are sweet."

I sat with folded hands.
And saw across the lands
The waiting harvest shining on the hill;
I heard the reapers sing
Their song of harvesting.
And thought to go, but dreamed and waited still.

The day at last was done.
And he neward, one by one.
The reapers went, well laden as they passed.
Theirs was no misspent day,
No long hours dreamed away
In sloid that turns to sting the soul at last.

A reoper lingered near,
"What!" cried he, "Idle here?
Where are the sheaves your hands have bound to-day?"
"Alas," I made reply.
"I let the day pass by Until too late to work. I dreamed the hours away."

"Oh, foolish one." he said,
And sadly shook his head,
"The dreaming soul is in the way of death,
The harvest soon is o'er.
Rouse up and dream no more!
Act, for the Summer fadeth like a breath.

"What if the Master came
To-night and called your name.
Asking how many sheaves your hands had made?
If at the Lord's commands.
You showed but empty hands,
Condemned, your dreaming soul would stand dismayed."

Filled with strange terror then, Last chance come not again, I sought the wheat-fields while the others slept. "Perhaps ere break of day, The Lord will come this way," A voice kept saying, till with fear I wept.

Through all the long, still night,
Among the wheat-fields white,
I reaped and bound the sheaves of yellow grain
I dared not pause to rest,
Such fear possessed my breast,
So for my dreams I paid the price in pain.

But when the morning broke.

And rested reapers woke.

My heart leaped up as sunrise kiesed the lands,
For came He soon or late.

The Lord of the estate.

Would find me bearing not the curse of empty-hands,

He travelled 3,000 miles, and attended a great memory of Dr. Buckner, the celebrated missioners who in thirty-time veers, expensions.

missionary, who, in thirty-two years' experience, had established thirty-two Baptist churches, ordained twenty-one munisters, and made 3,000 converts among the Indians. Dr. Williams had visited the Creek dians. Dr. Williams had visited the Creek Nation nine years ago, and was given an Indian name. "Eagle-Tied," because, as the Indians said when he soared in preaching, having to talk through an interpreter, he was tied. He delivered the principal address at the memorial meeting. The services began at 10 o'clock in the morning and lasted till after midnight. Several Indians made addresses, and there was a large congregation of them present. The only thing that marred the meeting for a time was that nearly every Indian brought a dog with him, and it kept one man busy with a switch keeping the dogs quiet.

The congregation smiled, and several of the young ladies looked like they wanted to pull their hats down over their bangs. The Indians never tire of worshipping God. They will sing and pray all night long. It was also a singular fact that the Creeks had never been known to sing or weep until they were faught the gospel. He was old, had gray hair and beard, was small in statue, and as he rose to wait upon the visitor limped from rheumatism. "I'm kinder old," said he; "rheumatism begins to tell on me."

The object of the visit was explained.

In Memory of John Howard Payne, Author of "flow home, sweet nome."

The reinterment of the poet's remains took place in Washington yesterday. The following tribute is from a Virginia lady: Be did not touch the sacred lyre to flatter kingly pride. Nor herald with triumphant strains the conquiror's onward stride: He did not wake the swelling tones in praise of tyrani's power. Nor join the rout in joyful shout in might's victorious hour.

He did not guity strike the chords for beauty in its bloom.

Mr. Cameron leaned back in his chair, and, with a smile, asked: "Do you want to buy any stock?" "Yes," he continued, "I've got an invention which will will supersed steam. It's to be called an atmospheric vacuum engine. I've got a patent on it in this country, and now am waiting for one from England. The principal use is creating power by the pressure of air. I exhaust the air in a cylinder, and get my pressure and power from the outside. It's something like the invention of a man named Brown, which was patented in London in 1825. He proposed to get power by gas.

[From the Nashville American.]
An incident which was both rich and racy, and quite laughable, actually did occur near Smyrna, Tenn., a few days since, which was about as follows: One of our neighbors, Mr. T. D., sheared the long our neighbors, Mr. T. D., sheared the long wool off of his favorite pet sheep a few tays since. As the shades of evening began to gather the air grew chilly. Mr. D., being a man of much sympathy, and in order to make his pet as pleasant as possible, took a shirt and pulled it over the body of the sheep and buttoned the collar around the sheep's neck, and let the sleeves hang loose, like a pair of wings. Mr. D.'s faithful dog espice this wonderful freak of art and nature, and made battle at the poor erenture at once. The poor sheep jumped creature at once. The poor sheep jumped the yard-fence and ran for his life. It ran into the public road just as Mrs. R. H. Nicholson and infant child chanced to be riding by. Her horse grew frightened, and ran for several hundred yards, but, as fate would have it, she remained firm in her saddle, and neither she nor the child was hurt. On the following morning this wonderful, celebrated sheep made its ap-pearance in Joe Derryberry's field, where pearance in Joe Derryberry's head, where its visit caused a general stampede; where the snapping of trace-chains and knocking down fences, and the word "Whoa! whoa! whoa!" bursting from the mouths of ploughboys, made music in the air. During the day Mr. D. was seen hunting a sheep that could be easily identified, because it had a shirt on.
